HIS GIRL IN DETROIT

By STACY E. BAKER

Copyright, 1910, by Associated Literary Press.

The marriage of Marie Norfield and Anthony Morton, scheduled for early June, was suddenly broken off by the girl without a word of explanation.

As for Anthony, he was too proud to ask for one. The two drifted apart.

Morton consoled himself with the yellow-haired Dotty Hemingway (Marie's well-cared-for tresses were black), and the dark-eyed maid who had been his fiancée showed a decided partiality for Wayne Haskell, a youth who had occupied a niche in the young woman's affections some time before Anthony had gained her consent for an early marriage.

The curious of Drakeville—and there were many of them—found little to gossip about in the attitude of either. Each was cordial to the other, and at the little parties given weekly by their set, danced occasionally together.

Wayne Haskell was a brilliant youth with an enviable future before him. He was a young M. D., just from college, but popular.

Anthony Morton was an architect, and while Drakeville's need of architects was limited, the sandy-haired young fellow with the determined take-life-seriously air, managed to make more than a comfortable living. Of the two, however, Haskell was the better match for Marie—and Morton knew this. Hence, many a sleepless vigil through long restless nights.

Marie Norfield and Dotty Hemingway were of the crowd congregated at Loon lake, some twelve miles from Drakeville, on the occasion of the annual outing of the Drakeville hook and ladder company. A hook and ladder company in a town the size of Drakeville is an institution of social importance. Haskell and Morton were both prominent in the organization, and both were on the arrangements committee. Therefore the equipping of the two young ladies was given over to others.

Loon lake is not to be reached by rail. Vehicles and horses of all stages and ages are pressed into commission on the day of this event.

It was late in the afternoon when Marie drew away from the outing grounds, alone and in a clumsy punt, for a cruise about the lake. Marie was an excellent oarswoman.

Anthony Morton, the duties of the day done, was sitting tete-a-tete with

She Was Standing Erect in the Boat, Using the Oar as a Pole.

Dotty Hemingway under a shading tree. Both watched the athletic maid in the boat draw away. "Clever girl is Marie," ventured Dotty, her red lips forming to a perfect smile.

This was the first time she had ever in Morton's hearing mentioned the name of his ex-fiancee.

"Really, Tony, I never quite understood why you fell out with her?" "I didn't," came eloquently from Anthony. "It's a curious situation, and I don't mind telling you about it."

Thereupon he explained.

At the completion of his story the girl eyed him scornfully.

"You mean," she exclaimed, and there was a world of meaning in the phrase, "She expected you to demand an explanation of her. She hoped in her heart that you could explain the something that has come between you, and she was waiting to give you the opportunity. You have calmly allowed her to pass out of your life. I don't believe there is a drop of red blood in your veins—I honestly don't."

"It is too late now," came from the pessimist. "She is completely infatuated with Haskell."

"She isn't," declared the girl, angrily. "You don't understand women at all. She is just running around with him to show you that—well, slangily, that 'there are others'—and you are taking me about for the same purpose."

Anthony had the grace to blush. "Oh, don't deny it. You know it is true."

"Are you angry with me?" asked the shame-faced Anthony.

"Of course not," she answered. "I don't mind confessing to you, since you have been so truthful to me, that I, too, had an object in view in allowing this intimacy."

Anthony stared.

"Today my differences with—with another have been adjusted, and I would like to see the broken threads of your own romance joined together."

"But—"

"There isn't any 'but' about it. I am a woman, and it would be strange, indeed, if I didn't know my own sex. There is a boat." She pointed to a punt tied to a nearby stake. "Jump in and hunt down your capricious lady."

Anthony's troubled eyes roamed the space about them. A fellow was striding hastily toward their cloistered spot. It was Haskell. Anthony rightly interpreted the girl's words as a dismissal.

Disconsolately, he arose and made his way to the boat. Slipping the oars behind their locks, he pushed the flat-bottomed affair from its mooring and plashed daintily out onto the water. This was an idle mission; he knew it. Marie Norfield was not in sight. Loon lake is a bending body of water, with wooded harbors all about, and a pretty little island near its inlet.

Toward this island Anthony threaded his way. She was there! Furthermore, without proffered assistance, she bade fair to remain there. He saw her as a turn brought the island into view. She was standing erect in the boat, and using an oar as a pole in a series of fruitless efforts to move the craft from a clinging sandbar.

Anthony, unobserved, kept an appreciative eye on the picture. "Do you want help?" he asked, as the girl suddenly abandoned her efforts and sank wearily to a seat.

A proud little head raised itself to stare at the approaching Anthony.

"No, indeed," came the sarcastic answer. "I am just exercising, you know."

Anthony laughed. "Perhaps I can help you," he ventured, "but before I do you and I are to have a nice quiet little heart-to-heart talk."

"Indeed?"

"I want to know," he continued, "just why you saw fit to throw me down so suddenly. I think I have a right to know."

"As if you didn't," came scornfully from the girl.

"Well, I don't." The youth spoke angrily. "And before you leave that sandbar you are going to tell me all about it."

"I will," agreed the girl frostily. "Now—what about the girl in Detroit?"

"What about the—who?"

"The girl in Detroit," snapped Marie Norfield. "Is it possible that you think I don't know?"

"You talk foolishly," retorted Anthony, the angry red rushing to his cheeks. "There never was any girl in Detroit—for me."

"The one," continued Marie calmly, "of whom your friend had the sublime nerve to write about on a postal to you which you lost on the next day to the last evening that you called on me."

It said, if I remember rightly: "She is back here again with paint on her an inch thick. Waiting. When will you come to town?"

Gradually the anger faded from the face of the youth. He grinned and then suddenly broke into a loud laugh.

"Funny, isn't it?" asked the girl, crushingly.

"Awfully funny," confessed Anthony. "You see, my friend, as you call him, is the owner of a big garage. It was my runabout to which he referred on the postal. I had it there for repairs, and then suddenly decided to have it enameled. I wrote him to attend to this. When it came back from the enameler's he sent me the card."

"Anthony, I—I wish you would get me out of this," said the girl, her flushed face averted.

She referred to the sandbar.

We're Four More.

Civic pride in New York's near approach to the five million mark in population brings regret to every New Yorker who was not included in the census.

"The fact that I do not count in that aggregation of souls gives a sense of personal loss," said a woman whom the census enumerator passed by. "It makes me feel like an outsider. I missed a chance to contribute to the city's greatness, and I'll all lost opportunities. It comes back to haunt me. In my home, only then sheltered seven persons, only three were enrolled because the landlady was too proud to let even the census man know she kept boarders. None of the four who escaped detection minded the omission then, but now that the city's immensity has been reduced to figures they regret the laxity that lopped off at least four names from the returns."

Bass Ties Up a Councilman.

Councilman Elmer J. Schroyer came within an ace of being drowned in a tussle with a monster bass in the Ontonabee at Kempton yesterday. He was wading when suddenly there was a terrific tug on his line. As he played the fish he gradually walked into deep water. Suddenly the bass swam around several times in a circle, entangling Schroyer's legs in the line and putting him into grave danger on the edge of a hole 20 feet deep. He had already begun to sink when his companion, Joseph Albright, a veteran fisherman of seventy years, came to the rescue, dragging out both Schroyer and the fish, which weighed four pounds—Albiontown Correspondence Philadelphia Record.

USING STALE BREAD

THE ECONOMICAL HOUSEWIFE FINDS IT ALWAYS HANDY.

So Useful That It is a Good Plan to Buy an Extra Loaf Occasionally to Keep for Drying—Its Many Uses.

Besides actual money waste, the economical housekeeper finds it inconvenient not to have stale bread on hand. There is so much that can be done with it from the stuffing of fowls to the preparation of desserts, that it is a good plan in large families to buy an extra loaf every other day to keep for drying.

Do not use bread that has not been carefully dried for crumbs. If allowed to get very stale in bread box it frequently has a musty flavor. Do not, on the other hand, brown it in the oven, as it does not make a good color in frying. Put in a cool oven overnight, and it is usually dry enough in the morning to grate or roll.

Do not use crumbs for crumbs. Bread is better than rolls or biscuits. While it is convenient to have a supply of crumbs in glass jars for emergencies, do not prepare large quantities at once. The flavor is better if crumbs are freshly rolled.

Never omit to sift crumbs, whether rolled or run through a grater. Before cooking season with salt and pepper, and add dots of butter if not intended for deep fat frying.

Another use for stale bread is to make small well browned thin pieces of toast, not too dry, for garnishing. Bread a day old is best. Toast it evenly, and cut off the crusts with a sharp knife to make an even edge.

These bits are shaped according to the dish in which they are to be served—long and thin, circles or triangles. Diamonds and round are used under individual dishes, as tomatoes, eggs, Welsh rarebit. Croutons are frequently substituted for toast forms.

Croutons are rarely well made. There are several ways of preparing them. They are buttered and browned in the oven, fried in deep fat or in a skillet with butter or crisped in drippings.

Sizes also differ from the tiny cube a quarter of an inch each way to three inch long shovels to eat with boiled eggs.

The simplest way to prepare a crouton is to cut slices of white bread three-quarters of an inch thick. Butter lightly on both sides, then cut into three-quarter inch squares and brown in a skillet over a moderate fire. Turn often. As soon as lightly browned put on browned paper on a colander to drain and keep hot. Serve quickly.

Croutons are used with most clear or cream soups, and as a garnish to curries, hash, certain stews, and with poached and fried eggs.

Toast demands bread at least a day old. Toastes dried widely, some insisting on being browned through, and crisp, others liking it soft. The best toast is crisp on outside and soft within.

Crusts should be removed, slices cut about a half inch thick and of even size, and the heat must be regular and not too intense. Watch carefully and serve at once under a cover or folded in a napkin to retain heat.

If toast is to be served buttered, the butter must be soft, spread evenly as soon as bread is removed from toast or, and set for a minute in oven.

All breads do not toast alike. That with a close grain, fine and smooth, is best. Do not prepare large platefuls before a meal or your toast is sure to be unappetizing.

A delicious dessert is made from three-inch cubes of stale bread dipped in an egg batter and fried in a deep fat. Serve hot with a rich wine sauce.

Meat and Rice Balls.

Put $\frac{3}{4}$ pound each pork steak and round steak through food chopper, salt and pepper to taste, add 1 raw egg and $\frac{1}{2}$ cup rice that has been soaked over night in water enough to cover it. If water is not all absorbed set on back of stove until absorbed. Make into small round balls. Put each of tomatoes in large kettle, season with salt and pepper. Cut two green peppers in halves, remove seeds, and rinse in cold water. Add to tomatoes, and put in meat balls. Boil slowly three-quarters of an hour. Last quarter of an hour add large tablespoon butter. Do not thicken gravy. Cayenne pepper or chili-sauce may be used when pepper cannot be obtained. Delicious when served with corn nuts made by rule that follows: To 1 quart white cornmeal add 2 tablespoons baking powder, and a teaspoon salt, and sift well. Add milk to form a stiff dough that can be shaped into little cakes. Drop into smoking fat and cook until delicately browned.

TO WASH WHITE SILK.—After washing carefully in the usual way, add one tablespoonful of wood alcohol to the rinsing water. It will prevent white silk from becoming yellow. This is recommended by one who has had great success in laundering white silk garments in this way.

TO SET COLORS.—To set green, blue, lavender and pink colors in wash goods soak in alum water before washing, two ounces to a tub of water. Black, dark blue, and gray should be soaked in strong salted water.

WANTED TO INFORM HIS WIFE

Timid Man Finally Discovers Knowledge That His Mother-in-Law Had Fallen in Water.

The other day, over at the swimming baths, a timid and retiring-looking man waited until the superintendent was disengaged, and then said to him:

"I do hate to give anyone trouble, but have you got a long stick or a pole of any kind you could lend me?"

"No, sir; I told you so ten minutes ago," snapped the overworked official. "So you did," replied the man, "but I thought I'd just ask once more. I think I've done my duty in the matter. Don't you think so?"

"What matter? What on earth are you talking about?"

"Why, you see, my mother-in-law lived off there, at the deep end, about half an hour ago, and as she hasn't come up yet I thought I'd like to tell my wife that I had jabbed round on the bottom for her for a while, anyway; but if I can't, why, I suppose I can't, that's all," and, pensively writing her address on a label to be tied to the old lady, when she came up, the conscientious man walked thoughtfully away.

Papa's Specialty.

"Papa," says the little son of the Judge who has been given a great deal of newspaper mention because of his decision in a certain famous case, "mamma says I've got to go to bed right after dinner tonight because I disobeyed her today."

"Well, Freddie, what can I do about it? You'll have to take your medicine."

"Huh! I'd think you would give your little boy a writ of habeas corpus, too!"—Judge.

TOO BAD.

George Baker

Mrs. Newton—Do you notice any improvement in your daughter's piano playing?

Mrs. Hixton—No; and I notice that there is no improvement in my husband's temper.

No Answer.

A little too tender was running after an express train, barking and snapping.

"Excuse me!" barked in a St. Bern and, "What are you doing?"

"I'm pursuing that train," snapped the Fyde.

"Yes, I know," agreed the large canine. "But what are you going to do with it when you catch up?"

There are some fables that need no morals.

An Optical Illusion.

"See here, officer," said the citizen, taxpayer, "why don't you clear out that gang of loafers in front of your saloon?"

"It's too bad that you are near-sighted, sir," replied the policeman. "Them ain't loafers—they are city officials."

To Avoid Observation.

Suddenly she struggled from his strenuous embrace.

"Are we observed?" he asked in a tremulous whisper.

"There," and she pointed toward the conservatory, "is the rubber plant."

Whereupon she hastily arose and drew the portieres.

In Effigy.

"When they came to New York everybody was saying of them that they would hang the expense."

"I remember."

"But now it turns out that her wonderful diamonds are only paste."

"Hanging the expense in effigy, so to speak."—Puck.

Haughty Cook.

"My dear, will you kindly ask that haughty cook of ours to stew some tripe I brought home? I haven't the nerve."

"Where is the tripe?"

"She's looking at it now through her lorgnette."

Careless.

"How did that irrigated farm of yours turn out?"

"Not well. I got thirty one day and thoughtlessly drank the water to stand of putting it on the garden."

Short on Currency.

"Did she marry the man who rescued her?"

"Yes, and now she's discovered that her life was the only thing he ever saved."

about the bay was enjoyed and in the evening the association was entertained at an elaborate banquet in the colonial ball room of the St. Francis. James McNab, one of the directors of the exposition committee was toastmaster and Mayor P. H. McCarthy extended a cordial welcome to the association. Other speakers were Friend W. Richardson, president California press association; Professor David P. Barrows of the state university; G. B. Daniels, managing editor of the Oakland Enquirer; Eustace Cullinan, attorney and formerly connected with the San Francisco Bulletin; F. B. Mackinder of the St. Helena Star; and Edgar Williams of the Redlands Review.

All the editors were enthusiastic in the advocates of San Francisco as the site for the exposition in 1915 which will commemorate and celebrate the greatest engineering feat in the history of the world. A committee composed of F. B. Mackinder, chairman, Geo. H. Burehard of the Eureka Standard, Alexander Crossan of the Headburg Tribune, C. D. Radcliffe of the Merced Sun, J. A. Van Harlingen of the Sonoma Union Democrat, C. Waite of the San Pedro Pilot and Edgar Williams of the Redlands Review were appointed to prepare an article giving an account of what had been accomplished at the meeting of association. This committee met Sunday morning and presents to readers of the papers, the editors of which are members of the California Press Association, the foregoing article and urges upon all the advisability of voting "yes" on both Senate Constitutional Amendment No. 52 and Assembly Constitutional Amendment No. 33, that the exposition committee may be able to go to Washington and present the claims of both San Francisco and California as the proper city and state in which to hold what is destined to be the greatest of all expositions and which, if held on the Pacific coast, will redound to the credit and glory of our state and her metropolis.

The members of the press association departed for their respective homes very grateful to the exposition committee for the opportunity afforded to learn all about the fight between New Orleans and San Francisco, and the need for immediate and united action; and also for the cordial treatment and splendid entertainment accorded. The Richmond Terminal was a guest among the nearly one hundred newspapers.

HON. FRANK GAVIN.

Frank T. Gavin, for many years a democratic leader in Contra Costa County, is the nominee of his party for the important office on the State Board of Equalization and his card appears in this issue. This office has jurisdiction in Alameda, Alpine, Amador, Calaveras, Contra Costa, El Dorado, Nevada, Placer, Sacramento, San Joaquin and Tuolumne.

This is a high honor for a citizen of Contra Costa county, who is held in high esteem, and Mr. Gavin's friends are increasing in number who believe that the mantle of this important office should fall upon a Contra Costan this year. The big cities should be more charitable to the country this year, and it appears that Congressman and U. S. Senator is quite enough for Alameda's portion. If Mr. Gavin carries Contra Costa county, his many friends say this county will land the office and honest and capable Frank Gavin would do a good service if elected.

DISTRICT ATTORNEY TORMEY.

The card of Hon. Leo F. Tormey appears in this issue. Mr. Tormey aspires for the office of District Attorney.

Leo Tormey was born and educated in Contra Costa county and his father was the late Hon. Patrick Tormey, who was for many years supervisor of District No. 1. After a thorough training in the public schools of his native county Leo attended high institutions of learning, and completed a course in law and has practiced his profession with high success for eight years with Superior Judge Latimer and is now in the firm of Tormey and Brown at Martinez.

Mr. Tormey is well qualified to fill this important office, and his host of friends say he will be elected next Tuesday.

Howdy. How's crops? Moderately good. Everything goes to the Contra Costa County fair at Richmond.

Effect of Sound and Color.

Every one is familiar with the effects of sound upon the nervous system. Harmonious sounds please and gratify, inharmonious sounds displease and irritate. Sweet music, the singing of birds, the purring of a brook, fall pleasantly upon the ear, soothing and delighting the hearer. The screeching of a rusty hinge, the banging of a door, the sound of a discordant piano, irritate and annoy the hearer. If long enough continued, such sounds will produce an evil condition of nervousness.

Peculiar Church Ornament.

Landboth "Old" church has numerous historic monuments, and in one of the windows is the full length figure of a peddler with his pack, staff and dog. This is supposed to represent the unknown person who presented "Peddler's Acre" to the parish upon condition that his portrait and that of his beloved canine companion should be placed in the church and that his dog should be buried in consecrated ground. (Phil Mull Gazette.)

Bad BLOOD

"Before I began using Cascarets I had a bad complexion, pimples on my face, and my food was not digested as it should have been. Now I am entirely well, and the pimples have all disappeared from my face. I can truthfully say that Cascarets are just as advertised. I have taken only two boxes of them."

Reverie.

Reverie, like the rain of night, restores color and force to thoughts which have been blanched and wearied by the heat of the day. With gentle fertilizing power it awakens within us a thousand sleeping germs and, as though in play gathers round us materials for the future and images for the use of talent. Reverie is the Sunday of thought, and who knows which is the more important and useful for man, the laborious toils of the week, or the life giving repose of the Sabbath—Amiel's Journal.

PREHISTORIC FACTORY.

Place Where Stone Age People Made Many Flint Implements.

Discoveries made on the Kentish bank of the Thames between Ebbot and Gravesend during the last few years, and the numerous "finds" made still more recently point almost conclusively to a state of populous prosperity in this district not only during the Roman occupation of the country but when the prehistoric inhabitants ran about during the Stone Age it was in general called a state of nature.

Further inland, to the south, the old Roman road and the Roman remains that have been discovered at various times leave no room for doubt that there were places of some importance in that vicinity. The spot in which the most important discoveries were made is at Northfleet, on the banks of what is believed to have been a noteworthy stream and navigable for the craft of the ancient Britons, the Romans and the Danes who followed them, and are known to have utilized the natural facilities of the place for those sorts which were so much feared by the British.

This stream is now little more than a dribble, and navigable for nothing larger than children's toy boats. It was during the gigantic excavations of a steam navy that the first of the important antiquarian discoveries was made. This was the uncovering of a large "field" of flint implements lying beneath the soil on top of the ancient chalk which has been deposited here to a great depth. These flints, almost without exception, are of a warlike character of the types termed flaked flints. Hundreds of these have been found, and are being preserved to form a museum.

Specimens are still being found, and the collection, when complete, promises to be the largest and most important of its kind. The condition of the specimens and their presence in such enormous quantities, and the fact that they are all of the one character would point to the conclusion that here was situated a large and profitable factory.

The second of these recent discoveries, which is even more important is that of a Roman villa, and there is now reason to believe that beneath the foundations of this building are the walls of another. Work on these excavations may reveal yet more interesting facts connected with the ancient dwellers in that region.

ETIQUETTE IN PARLIAMENT.

Verve-Racking Surveillance Key-
on the Strangers' Gallery.

The gentleman who shouted "Down with the Lords!" in the strangers' gallery of the House of Commons was promptly hustled out and was probably surprised by the swiftness with which his punishment followed the offense since an English publication. The attendants who shepherd strangers in the galleries keep their flocks under incessant observation, and have many minor vagaries to deal with besides the serious ones such as that of Wednesday night. It is a very common thing for a "stranger" bored by some dull speaker in the House, to produce a newspaper from his pocket, spread it out on his knee and begin to read in a few seconds he will find himself nudged by his neighbor, and looking along the row of fellow-strangers he will see that the attendant has set all the elbows working and is signaling imperatively for the immediate removal of the newspaper from sight. News papers are forbidden even to members of the House.

Occasionally a stranger is so impetuous by his surroundings that he presses to remove his hat. The peers in the gallery have to take off their hats, and a noble earl was publicly reminded of the rule a session or two ago. The clapping of hands, though a graver offense than these, is often more difficult to bring home to the offender, and when it occurs the attendants often fail to detect who was the culprit in the long rows of almost unnaturally innocent-looking gentlemen, whom their serenity with forces questioning. Consequently the offender sometimes escapes. Very different was the fate of the Indian gentleman who two or three years ago dressed himself in all his splendor and stood up, almost the solitary occupant of the gallery, to address the astounded House. His speech was cut wonderfully short.

Economy on the Throne.

Both as Prince of Wales and as King Edward VII. the late British monarch was a generous spender. Queen Alexandra was far from economical, and both she and her husband set a pace which charmed the London tradesmen, for as the King and the Queen do in England so do the nobility and the members of society. But with King George and Queen Mary things will be different and society is looking forward to quiet, if not dull, times. George was always a simple liver and prefers the quiet of the country to the entertainment of the capital. Queen Mary's people were poor, as royalties go, and she was brought up by her mother, the Duchess of Teck, to care fully count the dollars. She keeps a sharp eye on the kitchen expenses and is handy with a needle, taking pleasure in mending her children's clothing and even darning her own stockings.

Queen Alexandra will live part of the time in Marlborough House and part of the time on her estates in Denmark. She will have an allowance of $350,000 a year, with the income from her private fortune will keep her far from want.

DOCTORS ADVISED OPERATION—

DECIDED TO TRY GREAT KIDNEY REMEDY.

I want to tell you in a few words what my Swamp-Root did for me. I believe that my kidney trouble was some other suffering person's great deal of good.

About six years ago, I was dangerously ill, consumed by kidney trouble. One of the doctors analyzed my urine and reported that I had gravel, and further said that in order to regain my health and life an operation would be necessary. I did not want to be operated on as I was afraid that I would not recover. Someone told me of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root and said it was a reliable medicine for kidney trouble, so I decided to try it. I bought a bottle from Dr. Ross the druggist, at 300 Central Ave., Minneapolis, and bought a bottle, took it, noticed results and continued taking it until I was entirely cured.

Having been free from any kidney trouble for over six years, I consider that I am absolutely cured and know that Swamp-Root is the best remedy.

I never fail to tell my friends about your remedy, as I believe it is the best of its kind. Your U. S. Ointment is also very good. We are never without a jar in our house.

Yours very truly,
MRS. MARGARET E. ANDERSON,

Why He Carried the Lantern.

A blind man in Khoota (a Caucasian village) came back from the river one night, bringing a pitcher of water and carrying in his hand a lighted lantern. Some one, meeting him, said: "You're blind. "I don't carry the lantern in order to see the road," replied the blind man, "but to keep some fool like you from running against me and breaking my pitcher."

ONE OF THE FUNNIEST.

Old-Time Comedy Actor Tells of His Experience on the Road.

Charles E. Evans, who is enduringly remembered by the American play-going public as an old-time favorite in cent city roles, has been up against some funny experiences during his long service in the art. Mr. Evans tells of one amusing experience he had while playing in the Town Hall in Newbury, Mass., some years ago. It was an old-fashioned, tumble-down rickety sort of building and there were several steps at the side of the modest stage so that people could walk on it from the audience. Evans was going through his scene with Captain Kidd in "A Parlor Match" when a little fat fellow came stalking down the aisle. He was dressed in an old G. A. R. uniform and had a peg leg. Naturally, Evans noticed the approaching stranger, for he thumped along like a pile driver in action. The actor supposed, however, that the veteran would stop and take a seat in one of the front rows, but he kept on coming and mounted the steps to the stage. As he came on he gave a sort of awkward wave with his hand, indicating that the play should cease for an instant until he spoke. Then he stepped to the front of the stage and said: "If Peter Funk, the undertaker, is in the house, I've important news for him."

After this he made another gesture with his hand as if to give permission to proceed with the play, bowed politely to the audience, clambered down the steps and out. Evans noticed a meek little fellow in the rear of the house get up and go out, and was consequently quite naturally curious to know what had happened. It wasn't what the reader probably thinks, however, for the undertaker was not called upon to exercise his skill. The reason was quite the reverse. When the crowd Army man, who, as Evans subsequently ascertained, was the janitor of the hall, got Mr. Funk outside, he told him: "There's a plenty down to your house—twins."

Habit.

Habit is the dearest law of human nature. It is our supreme strength, if also, in certain circumstances, our mischievous weakness. Let me go on, scanning my way with any earnestness of outlook, and successfully arriving, my footsteps are an invitation to me to go on. It is easier than any other way. Habit is our primal fundamental law, habit and intuition; there is nothing more parental in us than these two. They are the source of all working and all apprenticeship, of all practice and all learning in the world.—Curlye.
